Weather Key Points

Regional Operations Center

Western Region

Sunday, July 24

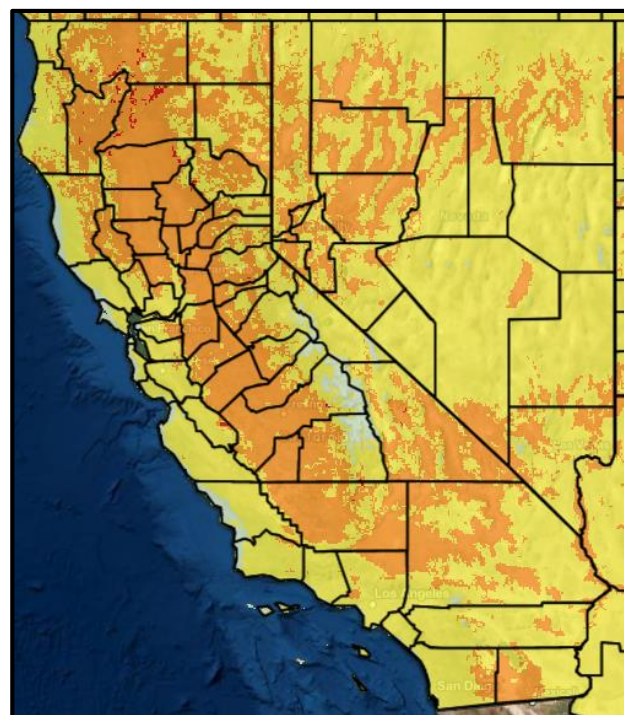

- Seasonably hot temperatures will persist for many inland areas of the state over the next 7 days, with moderate to locally high heat risk impacts
 - The hottest temperatures, as compared to normal for late July, will be noted across the far northern California inland valleys Monday through Friday, where readings will range from 100 to 105°F and high heat risk impacts are likely
- Scattered monsoon showers and thunderstorms are expected across southeast California today, gradually spreading into the southern California mountains and eventually the Sierra Monday through mid to late week
 - Widespread rain is not expected, though a few storms will be capable of producing heavy rainfall amounts as well as gusty winds
 - Localized flash flooding could also develop in the vicinity of stronger storms, but widespread debris flow or flooding impacts are not expected
- Outside of any showers and thunderstorms, fire weather conditions will remain elevated across many inland mountain and foothill locations through next weekend due to ongoing very dry conditions, hot temperatures, and locally breezy winds most afternoons
